Reconstructionism:

Role of the Teacher: (Topic: 40)

- Emphasizes individual choices (there is no common way of viewing the world).
- Teachers must take risks; expose themselves to resistant students; and work constantly to enable their students to become ' wide awake' .
- Due to greater experience and knowledge, it is the teacher' s responsibility to develop an educational environment that promotes awareness of the past and present, and of the future possibilities.
- Teachers help students become sensitive to human possibility and understand that they themselves are both necessarily and fully determined by the past (every present is conditioned by the past) but every present is pregnant with future possibilities for change and new direction-individuals can change the future.

Methods of Instruction: (Topic: 41)

- Stressing individual freedom.
- Empowering students to make choices about what and how they will learn.
- Buber " I-thou approach" - Student and Teacher learn cooperatively from each other in a non-traditional, nonthreatening friendship. (posing questions, generating activities, and working together).
